IgE-antibodies to cereals in patients with and without allergic rhinitis. Immunoblotting technique was used for detection of IgE-antibodies to cereals and apples in serum of 112 patients with allergic rhinitis and in serum of 40 control persons. In the patients and controls, respectively, 21 (20%) and 15 (37.5%) had IgE-antibodies to cereals and 37 (34%) and 5 (12.5%) had IgE-antibodies to apples. Thus, the frequency of IgE-antibodies to cereals was higher than that of IgE-antibodies to apples in the patients, whereas the frequency of IgE-antibodies to cereals in the controls was similar to that of IgE-antibodies to apples. In the patients, IgE-antibodies to cereal pollens and apples correlated with clinical and laboratory data, indicating that immunoblotting of IgE-antibodies to cereals is a useful adjunct to standard immunologic tests in the diagnosis of food allergies.

Occurrence and Identification of Particulate Organic Matter in the Atmosphere. Particulate organic matter (POM) plays a key role in the atmosphere and is expected to influence a range of atmospheric processes such as cloud formation, atmospheric radiative balance, and climate. However, detailed information on the nature and sources of atmospheric POM is scarce. Here we demonstrate the presence of atmospheric POM, both 82157476af
